HENRY HARRISSE

HENRY HARRISSE's name is connected with one of the most erudite bibliographies ever published ; indeed, according to Nicolas Trübner, Harrisse's "Bibliotheca Americana Vetusissima" is a "work unrivalled in its extent, accuracy, and comprehensiveness." This is the more remarkable because Harrisse had no bibliographic training, and because the work in question was his first attempt in this field. Before undertaking the work on the "Bibliotheca Americana," he had devoted himself exclusively to art, criticism, and the history of philosophy, translating into English and annotating all the metaphysical works of Descartes. Being unable to find a publisher in America for that class of books, he turned his attention to other subjects. At this time—about 1864-65—he made the acquaintance of Samuel Latham Mitchill Barlow, the generous collector to whose munificence bibliographical science is indebted for this splendid publication. Mr. Barlow shortly before had bought the library of Colonel Aspinwall that was destroyed in the fire which consumed the premises of Bangs, Merwin & Co., 696 Broadway, where the books were temporarily stored. Fortunately, Mr. Barlow, a few days before this disaster, had removed to his house a number of the rarest treasures in the collection. Harrisse was tempted, by the aid of Mr. Barlow's rich mine of invaluable works, to write a history of the beginnings, the decline, and the fall of the Spanish Empire in the New World. In making his selections among the many works, Harrisse naturally made a preliminary work of bibliography, and he began with Columbus. These notes were first published in two instalments in the New York Commercial Advertiser under the title of "Columbus in a Nutshell." Mr. Barlow, finding that these notes were eagerly demanded by those interested in the subject, proposed that they be reprinted with some important additions. Mr. Harrisse in preparing the additions did not rest satisfied with the material in Mr. Barlow's collection, but consulted, also, the works relating to the period in such other prominent libraries whose owners were public-spirited enough to grant access to their treasures. These studies were included in the following volume: "Notes on Columbus. New York. Privately Printed. 1866." (vii+227 p. 13 photographs. Fol. 99 copies, of which 2 were on India paper.) The volume consists of a series of notes and extracts from rare books, relating to Columbus, with numerous valuable bibliographical and historical notes. It contains also an account of the poems, eulogies, essays, etc., in honor of Columbus, and is a treasury of fact and fancy, relative to the great navigator. The photographs add much to the interest of the book; they consist of (1) A Portrait of Columbus from De Bry. (2) Annotations in the hand of Columbus on the margin of a copy of D'Ailly's "Imago Mundi." (3) Recto of the first leaf of Planck's supposed first edition of Leander de Cosco's Latin translation of Columbus's Letter to Raphael Sanchez. (4) Recto of first leaf of Planck's supposed edition (corrected). (5, 6) Recto of first and last leaf of Silber's edition of the Letter. (7, 8) Recto of first and second leaf of Guyot Marchand's first edition of the Letter. (9) Verso of the first half of Guyot Marchand's first edition. (10) Recto of the first leaf of Guyot Marchand's second edition. (11) Monument erected to Columbus at Genoa in 1854. (12) Annotations in the hand of Columbus on page 22 of Æneas Sylvius's "Historia rerum ubique gestarum," etc. (13) Last page of an autograph letter of Columbus.

These researches inspired Harrisse to prepare a study of all the authentic facts relating to the discovery, the conquest, and the history of America down to the middle of the sixteenth century. The bibliographical data collected in the course of these investigations became the nucleus of the

"Bibliotheca Americana Vetustissima A Description of Works relating to America Published Between the Years 1492 and 1551. . . . New York: George P. Philes, Publisher, MDCCCLXVI." (8+liv.+519 p. 400 copies in roy. 8°; 99 copies in 4°; and 10 copies in 4° on Holland paper, for private distribution.) In this work Harrisse describes and gives the collations, mostly from personal observation, of no less than 304 important and rare books relating to America, published in various languages between 1492 and 1551, commencing with the "Epistola Christofori Colom," first published in 1493, and ending with the first edition of Ramusio's collection of voyages published anonymously in 1550. As a specimen of American typography this bibliography has never been surpassed. The titles are printed in facsimile letters, and where woodcuts appear on the title-page they are also given in facsimile. Each book is described at length, and some account is also given of the author and his labors, the various editions of his works and their differences; and as all the books described are of excessive rarity, Harrisse gives the names of the American libraries in which they were to be found on the 4th of May, 1866, the period when he completed his labors. "Had Mr. Harrisse done no more than here stated he would have more than fulfilled all the duties of the bibliographer; but he has gone further, and has added to each description a list of the books in which information may be found regarding the works thus listed. Further, knowing how important it often is to the historian and to others to consult the original works on which opinions and statements are based, he carefully gives references, chapter and verse, for every fact he states—thus in his first description of the letter of Columbus, he gives no less than ninety-one notes, chiefly references to works consulted. Bibliographies are too often mere dry catalogues—transcripts of title-pages and nothing more. This volume is not to be classed with such publications. It is in fact a history, without which no future American historian can efficiently perform his task. Nay, it is a cyclopædia of facts relating to the early history of America, without which no large library can be considered complete. In his introduction, which, by the way, contains an admirable defence of Bibliography as a science, the author enumerates the labors of his predecessors in the same field, describing their works and giving some brief account of their history."* In view of all this, it is noteworthy that, after thirty-two years, the small edition of 450 copies that was offered to the public at cost price is not yet exhausted.

X Harrisse in 1872 published a supplementary volume, entitled "Bibliotheca Americana Vetustissima A Description of Works relating to America, Published between the Years 1492 and 1551: Additions. Paris: Librairie Tross." (4+xl+199 p. 200 copies in 8°, 50 copies in 4°.) This volume is not, properly speaking, a continuation of its predecessor, but a series of notes and additions "intended to aid towards forming a complete list of works relating to the discovery, history, and geography of America, printed previous to the year 1551." It contains bibliographical notes gathered in the leading libraries of Europe, and 186 articles, two-thirds of which are new. The other third is composed chiefly of descriptions de visu of extremely rare editions, which Harrisse had succinctly cited on the authority of other bibliographers, or published only in the appendix to the "Bibliotheca Americana Vetustissima."

Harrisse was born in Paris in 1830. When quite young he came to the United States to join his family, and went South, where he taught modern languages to support himself while he was studying law. He received the degree of A.M. from the South Carolina College, read Blackstone with the Hon. W. W. Boyce, and prepared himself for the bar in the Law Department of the North Carolina University. The Hon. Stephen A. Douglas induced him to settle in Chicago; but after a few years of unrequited efforts as a lawyer, he removed to New York and entered the office of the late N. Dane Ellingwood (at 59 Exchange Place,) at that time one of the most venerable and learned members of the legal profession. Harrisse is still entitled to plead in our courts. Thirty years ago he made Paris his home. Being discouraged at the treatment which his works, all written solely to promote a documentary and initial knowledge of the history of our country, received at the hands of the American public, Harrisse gave up Americana. During two years he studied Egyptology at the Louvre, under his friend Professor Maspero, translated several papyri from the Hieratic, and commenced a commentary on the Heretical Kings of the XVIIIth dynasty. At Mr. Barlow's urgent request he relinquished these studies and returned to American subjects, toiling henceforth and unremittingly and gratuitously, as usual, at the task of clearing up obscurities that rest upon the period of American discovery, which includes the voyages of Columbus, Vespucci, the Cabots, and Cortereal. Notwithstanding his sojourn in France, he retains his American citizenship. On the occasion of the Columbus quarter-centenary, Harrisse was made a Knight of the Legion of Honor by the French Government. Since 1854 he has published sixty-nine volumes and pamphlets in English, French, Spanish, and several other languages.

The following is a short title list of his bibliographical writings:

71. Découverte et évolution cartographique de Terre-Neuve, 1497-1501-1700. Large 4to, with forty maps, drawn by the author. (In preparation.)

It may be interesting to add that all these works, besides several others, representing forty-four years of close study and hard labor, have yielded to Mr. Harrisse less than three hundred dollars all told. Further, he never was fortunate enough to find a publisher in America willing to undertake the publication of a single book written by him, although offered in every instance as a gift.
